For who is this workshop:

This workshop is addressed to anyone with some experience in theater or dance willing to develop his physical language through an approach focused on individual expression instead of form. This workshop is open both for professionals and amateurs (we believe difference is source of creativity and a challenge for discovery).

Objectives :

The work we will touch is mainly based on the depth of simple human presence and on how it can be uncovered in the body of the performer in so called "here and now".

Sharpening the sensitivity of the body and its relation to partner, group, space and time, this work aims to:

- prepare body and mind of the performer to express him/herself in a language reflecting emotion with authenticity.
- develop the awareness of our bodies to allow them to breathe and move freely.
- listen and react to external impulses (partner, environment, group) in improvisation.
- sharpen the perception of relation between body and space, time and sound.

Tools :

We will work with techniques on the border between theater and dance allowing to create movements belonging to each individual. The exercises we propose have been developed during a three years collaboration and research in residency at the Grotowski Institute.
